Parking changes

SHORTER parking time-limits will be introduced in Mawson Lakes to free up more parking near shops. The 15 to 30-minute on-street parking will be introduced around retail and takeaway stores, following concerns from businesses about a lack of parking. The council will also undertake a pilot program where a reserved residential carpark will be used by shops during business hours.

Housing push

DOZENS of Waterloo Corner property owners have urged Playford Council to support a proposed 3000-home development on their land. Salisbury real estate agent Colin Martin, who has been working with 120 landowners on the 250ha Waterview development, told last month's council meeting the housing would complement industrial growth at Greater Edinburgh Parks. In November, the council voted against supporting residential development in the area, saying the land was better suited to industry.

Online too costly

ONLINE voting is still too expensive to be used for council elections, the Local Government Association says. LGA chief executive Wendy Campana said it would also need to be secure from computer hackers.

STUDYING video games has helped Tamika Glouftsis blitz her Year 12 studies. The Gulfview Heights student achieved an Australian Tertiary Admission Rank (ATAR) of 99.95 – thanks to an A+ with merit in her research project on storytelling in Playstation games BioShock, Eco and Flower. "It's a bit of a different topic... but I've always had an interest in them," Tamika said. "I found some games use interactivity as a storytelling technique and the personal involvement makes the emotional impact more powerful than watching or reading." A dux of Wilderness School, Tamika was one of 25 students across the state awarded the new Governor of South Australia SACE Award for outstanding results. Another 45 local students picked up merits for receiving at least one A+ grade.

Tamika hopes to study psychology with an arts major at Adelaide University this year. Fellow award winner Olivia Salagaras, of One Tree Hill, was volunteering on a camp for children with disabilities when she checked her results. The Trinity College graduate scored an ATAR of 99.85 and hopes to study medicine at Adelaide University. She said: "I decided when I was about 10 that I wanted to be an obstetrician."
